1974 in Los Angeles was, in a word, magic. At a time when Americans began breaking free from post-war conformity, the city that outsiders once considered glitzy and superficial emerged as the unlikely cultural epicenter for exponential creativity and blossoming self-expression.

From this “Magic Hour,” sprang forth not only groundbreaking works of art from film, television, and recording studios alike, but also the idea that it is often art and pop culture that lead our way forward.

Join MUSE/IQUE and Artistic & Music Director Rachael Worby for our soaring season opener as we celebrate the creative heavy hitters who transformed our city and the year that crowned Los Angeles the cultural capital of the world.
